State and local jurisdictions are realizing that incarceration is a major contributor to the rapid depletion of scarce public resources. In this current economic climate, there is a heightened need and awareness for improved accountability and public safety, employing the very highest levels of cost-effectiveness.

The Crime and Justice Institute at Community Resources for Justice and the National Institute of Corrections has now released their comprehensive 8-part series of papers known as the Box Set (available for free download at <http://cjinstitute.org/boxset>).

The Box Set is unique as it is the first complementary set of papers that addresses evidence-based practices within various facets of criminal justice systems for multiple stakeholder groups. The Box Set was developed as a means of sharing the research that criminal justice system stakeholders and community partners need to implement a system of evidence-based policies and practices and to enhance public safety, reduce costs, and improve offender results.

Ask the Experts

This series of interactive webinars has been designed to share information, answer your questions, and create a community of learning around evidence-based practices (EBP) in corrections. This is your opportunity to speak directly to the researchers, authors, policy makers, and criminal justice professionals who are doing this work.

The Wednesday Series will introduce the main concepts of each paper in the Box Set. Panel members and moderators will include policy makers and experts from a variety of agencies that have been working in evidence-based environments. Panelists will share their experiences and lessons learned in the following practice areas: Community Corrections, Judiciary, Prosecution and Defense, Jails and Prisons, Pretrial, and Treatment.

Your Questions - Answered

- How can my system move to become more evidence-based?
- How can decision-makers get better information using research, build on what works, and change what does not?
- How can we safely divert lower risk offenders out of institutions, provide more effective interventions in the community, and reserve institutional space for high risk individuals?
